

Dr. Karen J. Miller is an Associate Professor of Pediatrics at the Center for Children with Special Needs at Floating Hospital for Children at Tufts Medical Center in Boston, Massachusetts. She is board certified in Developmental-Behavioral Pediatrics and Neurodevelopmental Disabilities. Dr. Miller graduated from Tulane University School of Medicine and completed her pediatric training at Georgetown University Medical Center in Washington, D.C. She received training in Developmental-Behavioral Pediatrics at Schneider Children's Hospital, Long Island Jewish Medical Center in New York.

Dr. Miller was in primary care pediatrics for several years and worked as a school physician before going into Developmental-Behavioral Pediatrics practice full time. Dr. Miller's areas of interest include helping parents, educators, and pediatricians understand children with developmental-behavioral differences, such as attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder, learning disorders, executive function deficits, behavioral problems, and autism spectrum disorders.